

DEATHTRAP DANGER IN HIGH STREET

A cat was recovering at home last night after a terrifying ordeal that could have left the cat in a serious condition, but thankfully didn't.

The cat was busy minding his own business, when from nowhere, a Common Garden Snail ZOOMED past him, so quickly that the cat felt quite dizzy and had to sit down. Without a second glance, the snail CARRIED ON, not thinking to look back and help the poor, defenceless cat. The cat was quite shaken by the whole situation, and feels that his days of chasing mice are over.

"From now on, I'll only be chasing my own tail," he was heard to purr. "That road is just too dangerous. Only last week, a gang of worms pushed past me on the way to the Early Bird Pub, and there's a tortoise who thinks that this road is a race-track."

The cat, who recently featured in our "fattest pet of the year" competition has been checked by his owner for any signs of injury, but it seems he is only shell-shocked.
